PULSE New York is switching things up and will present its contemporary art fair to coincide with Armory Week in New York City. Look for PULSE New York from March 5 to 8, 2015 at the Metropolitan Pavilion in Chelsea.

Exhibited will be a curated selection of contemporary art by 44 galleries featuring work by 100 or so international artists. The majority of exhibitors will focus on works by three artists or less. Around a third will showcase two artists in conversation. Deciding to feature fewer artists so a broader range of art can be viewed is one way PULSE creates art fair environments that are friendly to discover contemporary artists.

“Always Reminded” by Tae-Jin Seong, 2011. Acrylic on embossed wood panel, 122 x 80 cm. Exhibited with Gallery LVS.

“PULSE is an environment that encourages interaction and we take pride in showcasing a microcosm of the contemporary art market in which artists can be discovered, acquired and supported,” stated fair director Helen Toomer in a press release.

Galleries exhibiting in this year’s edition include Cynthia Corbett Gallery (London); Galerie Ernst Hilger GMBH (Vienna); Emerson Dorsch (Miami); Lesley Heller Workspace (New York); Galerie Sator (Paris); Gallery Poulsen (Copenhagen); Conduit Gallery (Dallas); Black & White Gallery (Brooklyn), My Name’s Lolita Art (Madrid); Philip Bloom Gallery (Nantucket) and others.

“Response to Print of Davenport Island, California” by Lauren Plageman. Exhibited with De Soto Gallery.

There are twelve exhibiting artists up for a solo show at PULSE New York and a cash grant awarded selected by a jury. Artists under consideration are Diana Copperwhite (523 Gallery); Zio Ziegler (Antonio Colombo Arte Contemporanea; Ye Hongxing (Art Lexing); Fabiano Parisi (Cynthia Corbett Gallery); Elisabeth Condon (Emerson Dorsch); Melissa Maddonni Halms (InLiquid); Yevgeniy Fiks (Galerie Sator); Russell Nachman (LMAKprojects); Osamu Kobayashi (Mindy Solomon Gallery); Alyse Rosner (Rick Webster Fine Art); Jonathan Wahi (Sienna Patti) and Katsutoshi Yuasa (Yiki-Sis).
