

“Circumstance” Suite Transforms The Aldrich

May 1, 2015

RIDGEFIELD, C.T.-The Aldrich Contemporary Art Museum will be transformed this weekend when a new suite of six solo exhibitions are unveiled. “Circumstance” features work by B. Wurtz, Virginia Poundstone, Nancy Shaver, Ruby Sky Stiler, Penelope Umbrico and Elif Uras. Attendees to the museum’s gala on Saturday, May 2, get a sneak peek of the museum-wide installations. (The gala honors artist Tom Sachs). The public will be welcomed to view the new exhibition on Sunday during a free Open House held from 2 to 5 p.m.

As for the transformation part, “Circumstance” shakes up spacial expectations by morphing the museum into a maze of intersecting installations, where craft, found, utilitarian, historical design, and everyday objects sit beside works of art. Each exhibition includes specifically commissioned new work by all six artists, each who worked with the curatorial staff to create their solo shows.

“Circumstance” is organized by museum exhibitions Director Richard Klein and Curator Amy Smith-Stewart. The show highlights the way artists are inspired by their environments and the ways this influence plays out across object making. Each solo show allowed the artists to explore how context is used to articulate their art. The shows include never-before-seen aspects from each artist’s practice of making art. The artists are not clustered geographically and their work represents national and international influences. Locales of influence include Manhattan, Brooklyn, Upstate New York, Turkey and other locations.

Another unusual aspect of the show is each artist collaborated with the museum’s curatorial team in the development, conceptualization, and presentation of their work.
