Montauk has a new gallery for its art scene: Gallery at The Terrace. Inaugurating the new gallery is a solo show by Dalton Portella of works that demonstrate the shark can be beautiful.

“Dalton Portella: Shark Room 2015” is on view from June 13 to July 8 at Gallery at The Terrace. On Sunday, June 21, the exhibition will be celebrated at a Summer Solstice Party taking place from 4 to 8 p.m. There will be live music (including Dalton Portella and friends) and plenty of fun to go around.

“Dalton Portella: Shark Room 2015” presents paintings, art on surfboard, and an installation focusing on the beauty of the shark. The exhibition includes recent and new works from an ongoing series. Expect to find paintings, art on surfboard and installation.

Even in the redevelopment stage, Gallery at The Terrace struck Dalton as the perfect setting to unveil recent art works portraying the graceful aspects of shark. He suggested the idea to the curator, Bartholomew Schwartz. The concept took hold and grew to occupy all three gallery spaces instead of a single project room.

Now a reality, “Dalton Portella: Shark Room 2015” unveils the new Montauk art gallery.

Here’s what Dalton Portella has to say about the origins of “Shark Room 2015”:

In late May I was approached by Bartholomew Schwarz, the new curator at Gallery at The Terrace about participating in a group show to inaugurate the newly renovated (in fact it was still under construction) gallery space at Atlantic Terrace.

When I looked at the space, I suggested creating a Shark Room in the small room of the three room gallery with paintings and surfboards from a series I started in 2013, focusing on the beauty of the shark and stripped from its environment. That evolved in the gallery offering me the whole space for their inaugural show.

I've created two new large paintings for the show along with an installation created from a fishing net that I salvaged from Camp Hero.
