Consisting of all original photography taken 2011-2015, Alyssa Peek brings a fresh perspective to traditional photography. Images are either captured abstractly initially, modified in-camera or post-production, to create a painterly effect to all her work. She transforms the images from something you see to something you feel.

The show named, Blurring The Lines: Photography Reimagined, explains the way the photographs appear to be paintings and that some of the images offer a unique view of mundane scene.

Alyssa Peek lives in New York City and The Hamptons with her husband where she is a portrait and fine art photographer. Prior to starting Peek Photography, she spent over 20 years working in the Fashion Industry. In 2012, she left the industry to continue creating beautiful things through the lens of her camera and following her passion for art and photography.
