"Aspects of Minimalism: Selections from East End Collections" features paintings and sculptures by preeminent artists associated with the movement. The show includes works by Larry Bell, Dan Flavin, Robert Irwin, Donald Judd and Agnes Martin. Works influenced by the Minimalist aesthetic are also exhibited. "This dynamic dialogue highlights the extraordinary impact of Minimalism on the history of modern art and its relevance today."

Minimalism emerged in New York as a movement in the late 1950s and continued for two decades. By presenting a simplicity of form and content, artists working in painting, sculpture, and installation sought to remove any sign of personal expressivity, and allow the viewer to experience the work more intensely without the distractions of overt symbolism, narrative, and emotional content.

There are examples of Minimalist theory as early as the 1920s in Europe, but the movement at the time of its birth was defined by new young artists who were often reacting against the gestural excesses of Abstract Expressionism, challenging the conventional boundaries between various mediums, subordinating authorship, and calling attention to the materiality of their works.

“Aspects of Minimalism: Selections from East End Collections” investigates, for the first time on the East End, the broad range, reach and important legacy of Minimalism. The show occupies all galleries in the museum and spans six decades of art making. The earliest works were made in the late 1950s just as Minimalism began to take shape in New York. The time span concludes with art relevant to the Minimalist aesthetic from the 1990s and 2000s.
