

ART SEEN: ADAA The Art Show Gala 2017

March 2, 2017

by Charles A. Riley II

With a full plate of art fairs opening the same week, discerning visitors who care as much about food and wine as about the art market have a right to be choosy. Without question, the best of the parties from this point of view is the ADAA Art Show at the Park Avenue Armory, where the champagne flows nice and early and the hors d'oeuvres are superb.

Among the power players in attendance were the actor/curator/collector Steve Martin, artist Tracey Emin and collector Agnes Gund, among thousands of others. Digesting the rich artistic fare in the booths (including an amazing group of works on paper by Arshile Gorky at Hauser and Wirth, Lee Krasner at Paul Kasmin, and a superb wall of Jasper Johns and Brice Marden at Matthew Marks) is a great way to build an appetite.

This would be one possible excuse for the surprising suspension of etiquette (this is Park Avenue, not some wharf on the Hudson) at the so-called "food stations," troughs where the jostling among Tom Wolfe's social x-rays required the elbows of a hockey player.

To see images of who attended the Gala, view our slideshow:

View Slideshow

Agnes Gund, Craig Start. Photo by Ben Lozovsky, BFA images.

Joyce Pensato. Photo by Ben Lozovsky, BFA images.

Steve Martin, Anne Stringfield. Photo by Ben Lozovsky, BFA images.

To see more images of The Art Show Gala, view our slideshow:

View Slideshow

BASIC FACTS: The Art Show remains on view through March 5, 2017

Hours: Wednesday – Friday noon to 8 p.m., Saturday noon to 7 p.m., Sunday noon to 5 p.m.

Admission: $25 for a One-Day Pass. Tickets for the Gala Preview start at $175.

Park Avenue Armory, 643 Park Avenue (at 67th St.), New York, NY 10065. www.artdealers.org.

Copyright 2017 Hamptons Art Hub LLC. All rights reserved.